The University of California at Davis is pleased to announce the recruitment for a tenure-track faculty position in non-ruminant nutrition with a preferred emphasis in comparative animal nutrition. The successful candidate will join the Department of Animal Science in the College of Agricultural and Environmental Sciences at the rank of Assistant Professor. Criteria for appointment include: a Ph.D. or equivalent in animal nutrition, a record of excellence in scholarly research, and demonstrable potential to establish a competitively-funded research program in nutrition to address critical or emerging societal issues in animal science. The appointee will be responsible for teaching undergraduate courses in nutrition, be actively involved in undergraduate advising, curricular development and department and university service. The appointee is also expected to guide and mentor graduate students and participate in research and outreach programs consistent with the mission of the CA Agricultural Experiment Station.

The Davis campus of the University of California maintains state-the-art research facilities and provides ready access to a diverse array of poultry, livestock, and other domesticated species. The collegial nature of the faculty encourages and supports collaborative interactions that may cross departmental and/or college boundaries. The department resides within an internationally renowned land-grant institution dedicated to supporting California’s diverse multi-billion dollar animal industries. The position is a nine-month tenure track appointment. The community of Davis sits amid the fertile orchards, fields and vineyards of the Sacramento valley. Residents of Davis enjoy a high quality of life in a University town setting, situated between the Sierra Nevada Mountains and the Napa Valley/San Francisco Bay area.
